Providing assistance to your clients in raising a happy, healthy, and well-behaved WolfDog

Raising a Wolfdog is one of the most rewarding experiences one can have. However, it may be challenging at times!

Defending against bites and scratches, cleaning pee on a regular basis, and navigating the pet store aisles may be aggravating and exhausting. It might feel as though the problems never cease.

At Wolfdog Behavior & Management, we help your clients overcome their Wolfdog's troublesome behaviors and grow a happy, healthy, and well-behaved puppy by providing training guidance and product recommendations.

Your new puppy owners will join a group of almost 5,000

Wolfdog owners that have:

➔ Trained, well-behaved wolfdogs that are more responsive, confident, and bring you more delight than worry.

➔ Found the right products for their pup's specific needs

➔ Participated in a community of wolfdog parents and trainers and received personalized replies.

➔ Most importantly, they developed a deep, long-lasting bond with their wolfdogs.

Tools to Raise a Healthy & Well-Behaved Pup

Tony is definitely one of the BEST behaviorist out there! He gives great directions and offers actual insight on WHY for specific behavior and how to see what a dog is really saying with their body language.

As a former client now turned Behaviorist I can say with certainty that Tony's knowledge and teaching techniques of K9 behavior is top notch. Not only have I learned how to control and manage my own personal dog I'm now helping others deal with there pup problems. What sets him apart is the individual attention to each case and follow through to insure that you fully understand how and why of each technique.

I started mentoring with Tony just as the pandemic hit, so we were unable to meet in person. But Tonys dedication to spreading behaviorist knowledge didn't deter him from guiding me through the world of dog behavior, he was thorough, clear and concise with his direction as well as extremely available whenever I needed help or answers to a question. All of this was done via Skype. Tony was has been such an amazing mentor and with the extensive knowledge I have gained, I too am now working as a behaviorist.

I'm currently using Tony to educate us (owner and dog) on techniques, commands, and most important, a gentle, encouraging, and persuasive approach to the always cumbersome and difficult task of wolf dog training. I saw changes in my wds behavior after only one week. Tony completely reframed the way I thought about my wds and their behavior. He immediately pointed out emotional cues my wds were giving that I had never even noticed. Tony also focused on what I need to do, as the owner. My wds have shown such unbelievable improvement in such a short time, as have I. I now enjoy taking Anubis and Basil out for walks and feel much more connected to them and their feelings. Aside from having years in the business of dog and people training, and many other accolades, Tony knows how to treat people. He earns something money can't buy: Admiration and respect.

When I was 19 I decided I wanted to be a dog trainer. I was lucky enough to get Tony as my mentor and it changed my life for the best. He has taught me so much about dogs and dog behavior. He really took the time to make sure I learned how to do all the techniques and know exactly why we were using them. I wouldn't be where I am today with out him. He is full of never ending knowledge and still continues to teach me so much. I'm so in love with dogs, dog training and dog behavior. I couldn't be happier with the career I've chosen. Thank you so much Tony for helping mold me into the person I am today.

Had my first virtual session with Tony Nila yesterday (I'm in the UK) and it really has made me think very differently about how I should approach things with my low content wolfdog. The exercises make complete sense! Tala is only 9 months old and although I don't have major issues with her (except car sickness) I am changing my approach to everything! I can't thank Tony enough for educating and supporting me!

Tony Nila I really enjoyed these videos! I don't even have an issue with food aggression with my 3 wolfdogs, but there are many other scenarios where what I just learned from watching will benefit my pack SO much! Very grateful so thank you!

Today I had the pleasure to have a phone conversation with Tony Nila about wolf dogs and some issues. Even though I don't own a wolf dog I work at wolf dog rescue and sanctuary. The knowledge Tony has about dogs and wolf dogs is amazing! I've attended Cesar Millan's and Linn Boyke's workshops in the past They are great animal behaviorists. I can say Tony is right there with them. Especially in regards of wolf dogs. I can't wait to apply some of the tips he gave me during our conversation. If you need help with your wolf dogs or dogs don't hesitate to call Tony Nila!

Good Morning Campers. You may remember last Sunday night when I reached out for advice about crate training my LC pup. She was going spastic in her crate. I took the best of the advice and adopted a slower period of adjustment to the crate. Wanted to let the group know that today she actually went in the crate by herself to sleep 🥳! It's a big win and thank you Tony Nila for the help. More adventures ahead!

It is possible to teach old dogs new tricks....with the right teacher. This is a long post but please read it if you intend to raise happy and safe wolfdogs or are having a behavior problem and aren't sure whether to ask for professional help.

After my defending a common higher-content wolfdog behavior, jumping up "uncontrollably", resulted in a spicy debate about the appropriate level of force to use on wolfdogs, I reached out to someone I trusted with my dogs' feelings - Tony Nila. Tony has been to our place and we have visited him in NC, he knows that our wolfdogs are our babies and that we do everything possible to protect them and their feelings. We talked about the video that spawned the spicy debate and my Mariel who also jumps up "uncontrollably" for kisses but also to steal hair ties, hats, clips, and pull pony tails. We wanted her to be safer around others without dulling her shine for humans the least little bit, it's that shine that makes her special.

Tony suggested starting with a calming exercise and I finally watched his video on the subject. Light bulbs lit up all over my head when I realized, through his words relating dog behavior to kids, that Mariel never learned much self-control. She is extremely well-socialized but not always so well-behaved and we now know part of it is because we didn't allow her to learn to calm herself. Not at all the same as "dog training" where the dog is often punished for an unwanted behavior that is replaced with an acceptable behavior. Punish the dog for jumping up and then praise it for sitting is how obedience trainers work, way too bossy and not at all the relationship we want with our wolfdogs.

When socializing in public, we always stop and talk to people as we walk. And when the dogs get antsy from being still too long, we continue walking. Zero time spent just sitting because it's not our preferred lifestyle, we tend to keep moving.

Tony recommend daily walks on a leash with a half hour stop in the middle. Short leash, no attention, just stand still for half an hour and let her learn how to calm down. He said that eventually Mariel will sit, then lay down. Cindy and I laughed our asses off. Anyone who has met Mariel should be laughing their ass off about now, she's spastic. Well, she was spastic but that's not the right word now.

For just over two weeks, Cindy and I have been walking Mariel almost every day with a 30 minute stop in the middle. The first night, her butt hit the ground for a few seconds at about 30 minutes but it was 30 minutes of barely-controlled chaos. She jumped, lunged, dug at the ground, chewed sticks , chewed at the leash, and did everything we know she does when she wants to GO! All we did was stand still and ignore her every outing, nothing else. Last night, I could tell a BIG behavior difference before we even left the enclosure, no jumping at the gate. We took our walk and stopped. Mariel sat down then laid down at 5 minutes. My head exploded, the spastic one is acting calm!!

I called Tony today to praise his genius, thank him, and ask what to do next. His recommendation is to continue this calming exercise until we can step away from her 6' - 8' while she lays on the ground. Those who know Mariel are laughing again I'm sure. It may take a while to get to pulling ponytails and stealing hats but we feel good about Tony's gentle behavior modification approach so we're committed, this one easy thing is certainly making a noticeable difference.

No drama, no pain or force or battle of wills, just 30 minute sessions with a leash and the guy pulling the strings is a couple states away. I've been around dog trainers of all sorts my whole life and ended up deciding most have control issues, the dog just HAS to obey and the sooner the better without any regard for the dog's feelings. Thank you, Tony, for being a canine behaviorist and NOT teaching us how to train our dog. We can't wait to use this wolfdog calming technique on the others.

Two videos from the first night and one from tonight, a fantastic improvement already because our arms don't hurt now. 🤗👍
